ProcessPro 5th Annual Client Connect a Big Success!

St. Cloud, Minn., September 25, 2008 -- The 5th annual ProcessPro user conference, Client Connect, came to a close on Wednesday afternoon. Client Connect is designed to keep clients up to date on software developments, provide network opportunities for clients in similar industries, and keep clients current on industry regulations, best practices, and other topics of importance.

"We learned a lot and look forward to bringing all our data and findings back to the rest of our staff," says Glenn Weber, VP Finance, Stir Foods, LLC.

Conference sessions provided insight into, and additional training on, using the ProcessPro[®] software system. This year, however, there were many special featured classes that covered a broader and deeper range of topics that were geared toward the annually returning clients that wanted to learn something new. These classes, including Business Intelligence, eCommerce Solutions, and best practices taught by an APICS certified instructor, served to help clients learn more about software functionality so that they can achieve the maximum capabilities from their software.

"We had several FDA regulated manufacturers attend the Compliance 101 class that was offered this year," says Shanon Odegaard, ProcessPro Quality Systems Manager. "With regulations under constant change, clients found this class to be very helpful in staying current without going through all of the work to discover the changes themselves."

Much of the learning took place in the classrooms at the St. Cloud Civic Center for this three day conference. But many more opportunities for learning and sharing took place in the networking that took place between sessions and after hours.

"The conference was very beneficial to helping us learn how to better utilize the system," said Ken Hansohm of Parker Products. "I look forward to future visits and continuing to develop a long-term relationship with ProcessPro."
