ProcessPro Engages ERP Search and Selection Help Tools

St. Cloud, Minn., November 24, 2010 -- ProcessPro, developers of ProcessPro® Premier ERP software, recently partnered with Software Advice found online at www.softwareadvice.com. Software Advice is a third party organization that offers free advice on ERP software and a wide variety of software applications.

“Software buyers are increasingly turning to the web for software selection and research,” said Don Fornes, founder and chief executive officer of Software Advice. “In the last year alone, we have assisted over 15,000 organizations in their search for new systems.”

“By engaging this service, we are not only broadening our market exposure, but also supporting the efforts and resources of organizations like Software Advice,” says Rebecca Kempenich, ProcessPro Marketing Manager. “Researching and finding the right ERP software can be a huge undertaking for some,” says Kempenich, “but we find that those who take the time to educate themselves end up with more successful ERP implementations.”

ProcessPro recently published the white paper How to Choose ERP Software for Process Manufacturers. The paper features 10 key questions in strategizing an ERP search and selecting the best fit for companies.

“Purchasing an ERP system will likely be one of the biggest business and financial decisions a company will ever make,” says Tim Sands, ProcessPro Lead Business Consultant. “Companies want to be assured they are getting what they need in a software before they spend the money.”

In addition to partnering with Software Advice and offering free white paper resources, the business consultants at ProcessPro are available to address any ERP question. They can be reached via live chat on the ProcessPro website, email at info@ProcessProERP.com, or toll free: 800-457-3548.
